WE ALL MIGHT DO GOOD.

We all might do good, There is always the way, If there be but the will : Though it be but a word. Kindly breathed or suppressed, It may guard off some pain,

Or give peace to some breast. We all might do good In a thousand small ways-In forbearing to flatter, Yot yielding due prais e In spurning all rumor, Reproving work done, And treating but kindly The hearts we have won.

We all might do good, Whether lowly or great For the deed is not gauged By purse or estate. If it be but a cup Of cold water that s given,

Like the widow's two mites-it is something for Heaven.

TRUST ONE ANOTHER,

And meet each other's gaze. Pardon your brother's faults, man, And ask that he torgive.

Would it be after the manner of that father or mother, in, or near Boston, who sacrificee their little daugh ter as a religious rite; or after the manner of the Fall River rioters noticed above: or after the manner of those 12 or 14 young men in Pennsylvania who a short while since enticed an innocent girl from a camp meeting abused her till she became un-conscions; then secretly carried her to her father's house where she soon became a corpse; or after the manner of Mrs. Graham, of Scito county, Ohio, who stripped an orphan girl, laid her across a table, and applying the whip until the poor child's back but a mass of quivering. bleeding flesh, and then rubbed it with broken pods of red pep-per ! Hope and pray you will not northerpize southern society on any of these plans. And since we come to think of it, perhaps you had as well not try to northernize it at all. Let none charge or suppos this was written on the principle of "you're another." Nothing of that kind, nothing at all. The writer disavows it. It is written as a just and well deserved reof, and protest against that Pharisaic and pragmatic spirit that is so often manifested in utterances such as that now under notice, and the writer would rebuke it, and protest against it as soon and as severely in a southern as in a northern paper. It is the spirit and the ill-manuerly conduct to which objection is made, and not the place and lat titude in which they may be manifested. These same papers make a great outery against see tionality, yet scarce an issue sees the light without containing more or less of a purely sectional character, and at the same time calculated to justly offend per-sons of other sections.
